"Creep" is a song recorded by American singing group TLC for their second studio album CrazySexyCool (1994). Dallas Austin, who tried to write the track from a "female perspective", wrote and produced it. It is based on member Tionne "T-Boz" Watkins's experience with infidelity. The lyrics portray the singers as women who cheat on their unfaithful lovers for attention.

Scope creep (also called requirement creep, or kitchen sink syndrome) in project management refers to changes, continuous or uncontrolled growth in a project's scope, at any point after the project begins. This can occur when the scope of a project is not properly defined, documented, or controlled. It is generally considered harmful. It is related to but distinct from feature creep, because ...

- Scope creep. If you're a project manager, that phrase makes you cringe, because scope creep can derail your project faster than you can say, Houston, we have a problem. So you need to know why scope creep happens and what you can do about it. Scope creep thrives in the gap between what the customer expects and what the project delivers. That word expect is key.
